Sermon Summary: The Call to Faith Through Moses

This sermon explores the parallels between Moses and Jesus, beginning with their humble origins and miraculous preservation from infanticide decrees. Moses, raised in Pharaoh's palace yet aware of his Hebrew heritage, attempted to rescue his people but was rejected and fled to Midian for 40 years. At age 80, God appeared to him in the burning bush, calling him back to Egypt despite Moses's protests about his inadequacy. The sermon emphasizes that God doesn't require perfection or confidence—just availability. Moses suffered from what the speaker calls "mule-itis," being trapped by past mistakes and refusing to accept God's forgiveness and calling.

The narrative continues through the ten plagues, demonstrating God's supernatural power over natural laws, and the Passover event that foreshadows Christ's sacrifice. The sermon addresses skepticism about biblical miracles by pointing to modern scientific discoveries that make these events more plausible, from underground water reservoirs explaining the flood to bitumen deposits near Sodom and Gomorrah. After the Israelites' dramatic Red Sea crossing, God provided for them continuously in the wilderness, manna, quail, water from rocks, military victories, and His visible presence through the cloud by day and pillar of fire by night.

The conclusion emphasizes that God's call to faith always includes a call to ministry, often sending us back into familiar territory we've left behind. The Israelites' journey wasn't just about physical liberation but spiritual preparation, God testing and maturing their faith through trials. Just as the Egyptian gold was repurposed for the Tabernacle, God transforms our past into tools for His purposes. The message challenges listeners to move beyond excuses and limitations, accepting that God equips those He calls with His presence and power.

Discussion Questions

1. Past Mistakes and God's Call: Moses let his past failure hold him back from what God was calling him to do. What mistakes or regrets do we let stop us from serving God? How can we accept His forgiveness and move forward?
2. Going Back Home: God sent Moses back to Egypt—the place he had fled from. Why might God call us to minister to the people and places we already know best? What makes this harder than serving somewhere unfamiliar?
3. Remembering God's Faithfulness: The Israelites saw incredible miracles but quickly complained when facing new problems. Why do we forget what God has already done for us? How can we remember His faithfulness better?
4. "Here I Am": God simply wanted Moses to be available, not perfect. What excuses do we make for why God can't use us (too old, not educated enough, not a good speaker)? What does being "available" to God actually look like?
5. Tests That Strengthen Faith: The sermon says our faith will be tested after we commit to following God. Have you experienced this? How do difficulties actually help us grow spiritually rather than just discourage us?
